Simple, Powerful and CompleteBy JTFFor the intermediate blackjack player that wants to invest in a "card counting" system that is both powerful and simple, I believe that Mr. Cardoza's "Home Instruction" book will more than satisfy. I would say that this is nearly the perfect counting system for those that know they need to learn "card counting" to move up to the next level of play, but are intimidated by the idea of having to count cards.This book guides the novice counter from learning and understanding the count system to leveraging both a basic and advanced "matrix" (or index) to take full advantage of the count for all possible hands.A real boon for "advantage players" (i.e. card counters) is that fact that you can count cards with this system without looking like a card counter. This is because of the systems simplicity. Not getting "caught" is more than half the battle. If you are banned or "backed off" a blackjack table because they suspect you're counting, you've lost the battle.As always, there is no fluff or filler in this publication. I love that about GRI (Gambling Research Institute) publications. To the point with what you need to know, and nothing more. In addition two brief essays are included on how not to get "busted" by the floor or surveillance so you can keep leveraging your ability to count cards.Two caveats: 1. As with most GRI publications, the price-point is somewhat high. 2. You must have learned, by heart, Mr. Cardoza's basic blackjack strategy, as outlined in any of his other blackjack publications, prior to learning this system. The basic strategy is NOT included in this publication -- it is assumed knowledge.

The previously unreleased lesson plans, strategies and tactics formerly available only to students of the Cardoza School of Blackjack are now available to the general public at substantial savings. Learn at home at your own convenience. Like the full course at the school, the home instruction course goes step-by-step over the winning concepts. You'll learn the latest in advanced winning strategies: the 10-factor; the Ace-factor; effects of rules variations; how to protect against dealer blackjacks; winning strategies for single and multiple deck games and how each affects you. Limited Offer: The Home Instruction Course, normally $295, is now just $95. 44 pgs, 2004
