contestant receives depends on how long the cab ride is, the questions are of increasing difficulty (worth more $$). Each chapter in the book is set up the same, telling you where in NYC you're being picked up/dropped off. This is a true Question Answer book....not just a collection of trivia tidbits.....and the answers are at the end of each chapter (which means on a Kindle, there's no awkward hunting for the Answer section). This has been our go-to lots-of-fun time-passer for road trips....that is, until we finished it. We wish there were more!!

Based on many other reviews I've read on , it appears that many trivia and puzzle books are sent to friends and family in prisons. This book was a good choice. I've sent her a few different books, and I think she likes this one among the best. She was quizzing all her bunkmates, so the book was popular not just with her but with her companions as well.

I've seen a few Cash Cab episodes to see how the game works but if you haven't, don't worry, reading the beginning of the book is enough to understand the game play. There are 30 games (or episodes) in this book; the amount of questions in each game depends on how far the cab is going. For example "Carnegie Hall to 84th and Columbus Avenue" which covers 28 blocks will be a lot shorter than "Grand Central Station to 106th and Third Avenue" which covers 65 blocks. In each game, you get a few questions that are worth $50 each, then $100 and then $200. Tally up for score and try the Double or Nothing question at the end of each game. Get three questions wrong and the game is over, but who's counting? You enjoy your trivia in anyway you like. There are listing-type questions dubbed "Red Light Challenge" sprinkled along each game. The answers are found, upside-down, at the end of each game. In general, the questions aren't too demanding as other hardcore trivia books, but I find them very well written. There are no multiple choices. Here are a few examples from the first game of the book: 1. A childhood rite of passage, the MMR vaccine, protects against measles, mumps and what? 2. What mythological creature, finally slayed by Hercules, grew two new heads for every one that was cut off? 3. Once the centre of the Khmer Empire, the Angkor Wat temple is featured on what Asian country's flag? Answers: 1. Rubella, 2. Hydra, 3. Cambodia.

The fast-paced, fact-driven, backseat game show fans can now play without hailing a taxi. It's the best, the most challenging, and the most popular questions from Cash Cab-and they're all no fare.
