instruction. Fan of the web series. Not a means to communicate seriously with ASL. However, the comedy value of it gives it the 4 star. Plus, most of these can be used in every day conversations. Right? Donkey punch? Sure. :-)

About the AuthorKRISTIN HENSON first started learning American Sign Language when she was a student at Rochester Institute of Technology, which has a significant deaf population. Her dorm mates were more than happy to "help" her out. She once signed "I want a large pizza" to the worker at the school's dining hall, only to discover that her friends had taught her to sign "I want lesbian vagina." Since then, Henson has become fascinated with learning dirty phrases in ASL and sharing them with the world at large.
