Interesting. 3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. Good entertainment, but repetitive. By G. Guthrie This book is what it says on the title, it is a collection of "best of" lists or similar by different people involved in the horror field. We get contributions by authors King, Braunbeck, Schow, Bradbury, etcetera, and we get lists from the film side of horror like Roth and Craven, as well as others involved in the horror field. This book tends to favor horror movies in the number of lists, even though there are different sections, one on movies one on literature, etcetera. So there are only so many of these that you can read about my "Top 10 favorite Horror Movies" for example. I really doubt anyone read every single list in this book, as it would be very repetitive but I did go through every page and end up reading at least half of the lists (the ones that interested me). Anyway this book is bathroom material; pick it up to read a few lists, put it back down, and you're happy. Do I think this is an essential book? No. Was I entertained? Yes, but not overly so. I had some fun with the book, but I didn't find this to be a great read. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Excellent offering. By Jorge Alberto Orduna SR. I'm obsessed with lists, so when I saw this, I had to own it. I love horror and write my own horror movie review site (scaryfilm.blogspot.com) and have done so for years. This book showcases lists and commentary about horror cinema and the genre as a whole. I love it. It's exactly what I expected and a bit different from the other list books that I've seen. The subject is crisp and informative and should not be viewed as an encyclopedia, rather as a personalized touch of the horror genre. It's like reading a blog in book form, and well worth it. I recommend it.
